

WUSM Master of Population Health Sciences

Applications Being Considered

Applications are still being considered on a rolling basis for fall 2018 courses available in the Washington University School of Medicine Master of Population Health Sciences (MPHS) degree program. These courses are open to those with doctoral-level clinical degrees, including: MD (residents, fellows and attendings); PhD; DO; OTD; DNP; and PharmD. Fall 2018 courses begin August 27. Descriptions for the courses listed below are available online here.

Core Courses

- Introductory and Intermediate Clinical Epidemiology
- Applied Epidemiology
- Introduction to SAS for Clinical Research
- Introductory and Intermediate Biostatistics for Clinical Research
- Ethics in Population and Clinical Health Research
- Note: Medical Students must also take Current Topics in Public Health

Fall 2018 Electives

- Randomized Controlled Trials
- Applied Qualitative Methods for Health Research
- Epidemiology of Psychiatric Disorders Across the Lifespan
- Decision Analysis for Clinical Investigator and Economic Evaluation
- Global Burden of Disease

Spring 2019 Electives

- Communicating Research Findings to the Media and Lay Audiences
- Comparative Effectiveness Research
- Shared Decision Making and Health Literacy in the Clinical Setting
- Patient Safety, Quality Management and Quality Improvement
- Systematic Reviews and Meta-Analysis
- Development, Validation and Application of Risk Prediction Models
- Using Administrative Data for Health Services Research
- Addictions and Addictive Behaviors
- Introduction to Dissemination and Implementation Science
- Multilevel and Longitudinal Data Analyses for Clinical and Public Health Research

For registration and tuition information, contact Blanka Hodzic, MPHS program coordinator, at (314) 286-0881 or bhodzic@wustl.edu. To learn more about the MPHS program, visit www.mphs.wustl.edu.

Attachments:

MPHS Program Flier